For Immediate Release

Julian, California is an historic gold mining town nestled in the mountains above San Diego world-renowned for its delicious apple pie. But, this time of year, Julian has even more to offer than its quaint ambiance and delicious fare. It's spring, and Julian is in bloom.

Like the rest of Southern California, Julian has benefited from this year's exceptional rainfall and the village is awash in an unusually beautiful wildflower display.

Often the first to announce Julian's wildflower season are the daffodils. Popping up along the roadsides and in open fields throughout the township, Julian's daffodils can be attributed to Sally Snipes, a local resident of Julian who, in 1990, began planting daffodil bulbs in honor of her father, Jack. Her gesture attracted the attention of other locals who joined her in planting daffodils all over Julian's rural countryside, resulting in more than three million daffodils bringing "gold" back to Julian every year.

Daffodils are just the beginning of Julian's wildflower display. Julian is also wrapped in both the fragrance and the color of lilac. The hillsides, valleys and orchards are resplendent in clusters of these light purple flowers made all the more dramatic against the plants' rich green heart-shaped leaves. The delicate lily-of-the-valley is also a welcomed guest to the Julian wildflower season. Their tall, lanky shoots covered with white, bell-shaped blossoms are, for many, the definition of spring.

Julian's wildflower display includes red bush monkey flowers, goldenrod, California wild rose, peonies, and any number of the nearly 900 flowering plants native to Julian and its surrounding geography. A celebration of all this beauty is scheduled for May 10-13th when the Julian Woman's Club sponsors its 90th Julian Wildflower Show at the Julian Town Hall from 10am to 4pm daily. The show is free to the public.
